Construction Law

Traub Lieberman attorneys are experienced in representing design professionals, owners, developers, construction managers, general contractors and subcontractors involved in complex commercial and residential construction.

In representing the interests of the construction industry, Traub Lieberman attorneys litigate a wide variety of claims, including delay of construction and contract disputes, construction defects, structural failures, labor law disputes, and construction management claims. Over the years, we have represented all members of the construction process on projects both large and small. The cases we have litigated have involved hotels, apartment complexes, high-rise condominium projects, skyscrapers, office buildings, warehouses, transportation centers, retail space and government buildings. Because most large-scale construction projects also involve product manufacturers, suppliers, and subcontractors, Traub Lieberman attorneys have been called onto represent their interests, as well.

It's important to turn to experienced attorneys when it comes to construction claims, which can be some of the most difficult and complex cases to litigate. Many construction claims also require experience and knowledge in other practice areas, including environmental law and toxic torts. When litigating these complex cases, it is important to have highly-skilled litigators from multiple disciplines on your side. Traub Lieberman is able to provide that caliber of representation to our clients.

Additionally, our attorneys have experience involving contract formation, development and construction process, hazardous waste regulation, and bond and suretyship matters.
