Bradley's practice is diverse and includes litigating first and third-party insurance coverage disputes, trying catastrophic personal injury and multi-peril property insurance claims, litigating complex, multi-party commercial disputes, handling consumer and commercial product liability claims, construction claims, and representing professionals and professional entities facing errors and omissions lawsuits.

For Bradley Guldalian, a partner in the firm's St. Petersburg office, the road to success as insurance counsel is paved with hard work, diligence, attention to detail, and providing timely, effective representation to his clients. Bradley's clients value not only his effective advocacy and aggressive litigation skills, they also appreciate his conscientious effort to be available for them, to respond to their inquiries as soon as possible, and to provide them with efficient and clearly understood answers to their questions and concerns in a professional and ethical manner.

Always focused on identifying and minimizing risks, Bradley has tried numerous lawsuits during his career. He has litigated a multitude of first-party property insurance claims involving individuals and commercial enterprises who have named peril or all-risk insurance policies including claims of theft, arson, fraud, wind and water damage, roof and structural damage, stucco, and sinkholes. Bradley also litigates multimillion-dollar, catastrophic personal injury, wrongful death, trucking, workers' compensation, nursing home and assisted living facility personal injury and death claims, and commercial and individual product liability claims throughout the United States.

Bradley has handled several complex, multi-party first and third-party insurance coverage disputes including homeowner's insurance claims, commercial general liability and commercial property claims, inter and intra-state trucking claims, and inland marine and maritime claims. Bradley's experience also includes numerous types of professional liability claims involving insurance agents, insurance brokers, attorneys, real estate agents, surveyors, mechanical and civil engineers, and architects, as well as first and third-party bad faith claims against insurers.
